The full text of Senator McLaurin's interview follows:

"The Associated Press dispatch published in yesterday afternoon's Record, saying that the British ministry had forbidden the exportation of cotton from the British Isles to any ports except those of France and Italy is in line with the attempt that England has made from the very beginning to force American cotton to come to England. Primarily her object is to prevent Germany from getting cotton, and as goods of any kind, cotton included, destined to ports on the Black Sea, North Sea, or the Baltic, are contraband of war, this would effectually give England a monopoly of the Amer-
